Headline:
Cloud thickening, with outbreaks of rain later. Cold Saturday.

Today:
A mostly dry start with variable cloud and some brighter or sunny intervals. The odd shower likely across the south, clearing east. Cloud thickening through the day, with the odd spot of rain or drizzle moving into Norfolk later. Maximum temperature 10 deg C (50 deg F).

Tonight:
Evening rain easing. Clear spells possible, mainly Norfolk after midnight, and feeling chilly. Cloud thickening further south, with brisk winds and outbreaks of rain possible by dawn. Minimum temperature 1 deg C (34 deg F).

Saturday:
Mostly cold, cloudy but dry. Further rain likely across the far southwest, perhaps some brief snow possible. Northern extent is uncertain, before clearing south later. Windy, especially along coasts. Maximum temperature 3 deg C (37 deg F).

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
Dry Sunday and cold, but cloudy. Some rain, perhaps brief snow overnight. Fine, dry but cold Monday. Further rain and strong winds clearing northeast Tuesday morning and turning milder.
